

For the Love of Travel

Aaron Leventhal

Exploring Alaska: The Last Frontier

Alaska is unique, comprised of a land mass twice the size of Texas, 45,000 miles of coastland and a glacial area 100 times greater than that of the rest of North America. With almost 50 percent of its population in metropolitan Anchorage, the 49th state is, for the most part, a wilderness wonderland. For more than a decade, my wife Beth urged me to explore Alaska with her, but I am averse to cold weather, and prefer warm, tropical destinations. Nevertheless, I consented to a 10-day tour of Alaska this past September and was rewarded with an exceptional experience. Everywhere we traveled we were mesmerized by Alaska's natural beauty—majestic, snow-capped mountains; glacial lakes; dense, wooded forests; and lush, green valleys. Alaskans everywhere were welcoming, and proud of their land, its history and culture and rugged outdoor lifestyle. We created our own itinerary, traveling by small ferry boats, trains and express buses rather than large cruise ships, the standard vehicle for tourist travel (more than a million passengers annually). We prefer serendipitous encounters with locals and the flexibility to alter our schedule that the cruise lines cannot provide. The best time to explore Alaska is from May through September, when the climate usually is mild, dry and sunny. However, be prepared for sticker shock, since this is the high season for its hospitality industry. Costs for lodging and sightseeing tours are reduced from April to mid-May and in September after Labor Day weekend. Listed below are some of our most memorable experiences. There is much more to explore in this fascinating state, which has been branded America's "Last Frontier."

Juneau

The charming state capital (pop. 30,000) in southeast Alaska is located on the Inside Passage and surrounded by a ring of majestic mountains. Attractions include Mount Roberts Tramway, Macaulay Salmon Hatchery and Mendenhall Glacier. Adventure Bound Alaska offers an unforgettable cruise through Tracy Arm Fjord past waterfalls, glaciers and wildlife to the massive Sawyer Glacier. The Silverbow Inn is a charming, downtown boutique hotel with a friendly staff and delicious breakfasts. Nearby restaurants include the Hangar on the Wharf, Saffron Indian Comfort Food and Salt for creative Alaskan cuisine.

Skagway

We boarded a ferry in Juneau for a relaxing seven-hour trip to the historic, small town of Skagway, famed for the frenzied

The Sawyer Glacier Cruise through the Tracy Arm Fjord days of the Klondike Gold Rush of 1897-98. In just two short years more than 20,000 prospectors with dreams of riches passed through the town to the nearby gold fields. They built the landmark, narrow-gauge White Pass & Yukon Route Railroad through treacherous mountain slopes in Arctic blizzards and temperatures as low as 50 degrees below zero. We enjoyed a railroad excursion through treacherous mountain passes in vintage cars, the self-guided Downtown Walking Tour and a visit to the Red Onion Saloon, with its hilarious brothel tour, bedpan collection and sexily costumed wait staff. The historic Skagway Inn on Broadway, the town's main street, includes a full breakfast at its popular Olivia's Bistro, which features wild game and Alaskan seafood.

Beth and Aaron in Denali National Park

A leisurely, four-hour ride from Anchorage on the state-run Denali Star Railroad took us to the quirky village of Talkeetna (pop. 900). Settled by trappers and prospectors, Talkeetna flourished in the 1920s with the coming of the railroad. After decades of booms and busts, the town today is a quintessential tourist favorite, said to have inspired the TV show "Northern Exposure." Main Street is lined with locally owned and managed galleries and shops in rustic log buildings, including the popular Blue Moose, known for

Denali National Park

Established in 1917, Denali is the first national park created for wildlife and not for geological attributes. It does, however, boast Denali Mountain (formerly Mt. McKinley), the tallest mountain on earth measuring 20,310 feet from its base. Just one 92-mile road stretches through the park's six million acres (larger than the state of Vermont). Our tour guide and driver Justin Harkins had an uncanny ability to spot wildlife on the tundra, sighting moose, Dall sheep, snowshoe hare, golden eagles and grizzly bears. The Visitor Center offers free sled dog demonstrations and ranger-guided walks. The Grande Denali Lodge has splendid mountain views and courtesy shuttle services. The Eastern European fare at Moose-AKA's is outstanding.

Columbus travel writer Aaron Leventhal has organized a small group tour for 10-days in September 2020. Check it out at LeventhalTravel.com.

Photos by Beth Ervin Leventhal.

Rail ride through Skagway mountain gorge.

AT LAST — THE BUCKEYE GIFT
WHERE ONE SIZE TRULY FITS ALL
TWO BSB HOLIDAY SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR JUST $29.95

In-depth coverage of all OSU sports • Comments from coaches and players • The latest recruiting information • Features on former Buckeye greats • Rosters, schedules and statistics

Here's a chance to give yourself the gift of Buckeye Sports Bulletin at the special price of $29.95 (a $99.95 value) and give a second gift subscription absolutely free. That's right! Two subscriptions to Buckeye Sports Bulletin, the leading source for Ohio State sports news since 1981, for just $29.95. Additional gifts are only $19.95 each. Why give a gift that will sit in a drawer when you and your favorite Buckeye fan can be reading BSB 24 times a year? Your subscription will also include free access to our 24/7, full-service website, making BSB your year-round source for all the latest Buckeye news. Hurry! These holiday savings are for a limited time only.

To order, call 614.486.2202 and ask for the "One Size Fits Two Special" or send your order to PO Box 12453, Columbus, OH 43212